When the our nation was getting ready to celebrate 100 years in 1976, many people worked to identify historic landmarks and register them. Esther McCormick, head of Sunbury's Sesquicentennial history committee, completed forms to register the Town Hall in the middle of the square and the building then known as the Hopkins House at 45 S. Columbus Street.

A group of people working with the Ohio Historical Society identified other buildings of historic interest in the area. Their goal was to make the area around the square into a historic district but it upset property owners who worried about constraints which might be put on their properties and the project was dropped. However, these buildings were featured in "The Sunbury News" and the reports collected in a reference book placed in Community Library.

No sooner was the Hopkins House identified as a Historic Place than it was sold to Harold McMillan who in turn gave it to the Community Library to showcase local history. Almost 20 years later the Big Walnut Historical Society was formed to save the building from becoming a parking lot when the new library was built in a better location and had provisions for storing local history.

When researching the history of the building, we discovered it was built in 1816 (See Next Column)

Carson Returns to Myers Inn

On Tuesday, March 12, at 7:30 p.m., Brent Carson will once again provide the program for the Big Walnut Area Historical Society. Admission is free.

A retired history teacher, Carson was born in Delaware, graduated from Hayes High School and taught in Willis Jr. High until he retired. He has been a pillar in the Delaware County Historical Society for many years and is currently the President Emeritus of the society.

He co-chaired the Delaware County Bicentennial Celebration with Rick Helwig in 2008.

Through the years, Carson has helped produce several DVDs and programs on a variety of topics of local history. "Friday Night in Downtown Delaware" is for sale in the Myers Inn Museum Gift Shop.

For the last 50 years he has been giving programs on local history. He kept picking up stories from people and last year decided to write a book titled "Carried Treasures" with Ric Stranges, a former Delaware Hayes High School Principal. He will be discussing his book and retelling some of those stories during the program in the Myers Inn Museum.

The Museum faces Sunbury Square at the corner of South Columbus and Granville Streets.

Damon Bower took over the task to get a plaque started by Alan and Carol Norris before covid. It is now mounted just left of the front door.
